Bowing Down Home, hosted by the University of Prince Edward Island

Bowing Down Home

For over two hundred years, Prince Edward Island has been home to a strong fiddling tradition: a blend of Scottish, Irish and Acadian French influences. Nearly every "district" had its stock of fiddlers who played their lively, highly expressive music year round at house dances, weddings, "frolics" (work parties), church picnics, community socials, and schoolhouse dances. This traditional PEI fiddling style has not previously been well represented on either commercial or field recordings, but you can access it right here on Bowing Down Home. This website encompasses the full range of Island fiddling as it survived into the last decade of the twentieth century and the first decade of the twenty-first. About 120 Island fiddlers are featured — analogophone and francophone alike — representing all the Island's diverse regional playing

Intangible Cultural Heritage Inventory - Knowledge and Practices Concerning Nature and the Universe

Knowledge and practices concerning nature and the universe include knowledge, know-how, skills, practices and representations developed by communities by interacting with the natural environment. It includes areas such as traditional ecological wisdom, indigenous knowledge, knowledge about local fauna and flora, traditional healing systems, beliefs, and superstitions. Some common examples in relation to Newfoundland and Labrador include berry picking, trapping, sealing, fishing berths, food preservation, weather lore, nautical lore, logging, and animal husbandry.

The Agricultural History Society of Newfoundland and Labrador

The Agricultural History Society of Newfoundland and Labrador was founded in 1987. Its mandate is to raise the awareness of the role of agriculture in the history of this province both on the island and in Labrador. The Society has researched many aspects of agriculture and has shared their findings with the public through exhibits, lectures, and publications. They have also deposited in the Centre of Newfoundland Studies Archives, Memorial University, archival material donated by members of the farm community. For their recognition of the Century Farmers in the province, the Society received the Historic Sites Association's Manning Award for the public presentation of historic places in 2000. The Society successfully recommended Root Cellars as a Distinctive Cultural Tradition and Practice to be recognized in the provincial Historic Commemorations programme in 2013. The Society has received funding for its research activities from the agricultural industry in this province and from the provincial Cultural and Economic Development Programme.

All Around the Table: Preserving and Celebrating Seniors' Food Knowledge

A vegetable garden, laying hens, a fishing boat, berry grounds: when our grandparents were younger, the grocery store was out the back door. Since then, however, Newfoundland and Labrador has become increasingly dependent upon an uncertain global food system, disruptions to which are being felt more frequently on the tables of families here, leading communities to seek more sustainable and healthy local alternatives.

In our search we can look to the traditional ways of growing, preserving, and preparing our food that still make sense today. These traditions live on in the knowledge of older generations; wisdom that has been captured in these 12 video and audio interviews with seniors from Eastern Newfoundland who share their personal food stories. As a collection these interviews shed light on how the way forward towards a better food system begins by looking for inspiration in our past.

All Around the Table was created by Food Security Network NL (FSN) in 2013 as part of its Root Cellars Rock initiative. FSN is a provincial, non-profit organization which was founded in 1990 in response to growing concerns about hunger and poverty in the province. FSN's mission is to actively promote comprehensive, community-based solutions to ensure access to adequate and healthy food for all. To learn more about FSN visit <http://www.foodsecuritynews.com/>. To learn more about Root Cellars Rock and expanding your own healthy, local food skills visit <http://rootcellarsrock.ca/>.

Fisheries (formerly the Mark Ferguson Collection)

The daily work of the fishery had a profound impact on the culture and history of Newfoundland and Labrador. The particular method of curing fish in Newfoundland (and Atlantic Canada), of soaking in brine and sun-drying on stretches of coastline, led to the development of specific architectural forms, language, and many different aspects of occupational folklore. This collection showcases the history, hard work, and lifestyle of many Newfoundland fishing families. A large section of this collection was compiled by Memorial University Department of Folklore graduate Mark Ferguson, who conducted several audio interviews with people who worked in the Newfoundland fishery. Recorded in the early 1990s, these interviews focus mainly on the subject of salt fish.

Forestry

In Newfoundland and Labrador, forestry developed as a viable industry and traditions were created and transmitted as a result. Men worked in the lumber camps, sawmills and/or ventured into the woods around their communities, cutting with a handful of fellow loggers. Cutting and collecting lumber was arduous work. In the lumber camps men worked from sunrise to sunset every day of the week, except Sundays, several kilometers deep in the woods. Living quarters consisted of log cabins with several bunk beds and a wood stove. Despite the forbidding nature of the logging industry in Newfoundland, there were fun times. Many folk songs, particularly satirical songs, practical jokes and other forms of folklore, particularly folk art, were created in the lumber camps, often as a distraction from the unforgiving nature of lumbering.

High Steel

As skyscrapers climbed to greater heights in the late nineteenth century, so did the Newfoundlanders who helped build them. Balancing along beams often no more than a foot wide, they worked high above the clouds. Groups of Newfoundland iron workers felt the rush of working high steel as they raised such projects as The Sears Tower and The World Trade Center. Many carried on the iron work tradition of their fathers and brothers, traveling to California, Toronto, New York and Philadelphia to help build some of the largest skyscrapers in North America.

Root Cellar Traditions

Root cellars have played an important role in the folklore of Newfoundland and Labrador for generations. These underground or partially underground structures are used to protect food such as vegetables, berries and preserves from frost in the winter and heat in the summer. They were constructed by digging a hole in the earth, reinforcing it with wood, rock, and mortar, and then covering with soil leaving small door for access.

Once commonplace throughout Newfoundland, root cellars provided consistent humidity and temperature levels essential for food security prior to the introduction of electricity and refrigeration. Additionally, root cellars

 The Impact of the Irish on New Brunswick Schools

Introduction

Irish immigrants in New Brunswick taught in one-third of New Brunswick schools by the mid nineteenth century, the majority quickly becoming licensed teachers shortly after their arrival and remaining in the profession. From 1784-1837 the Governor-in-Council (Lieutenant Governor in Council after 1786) oversaw matters of education, including making provision to pay teachers. In 1837 county school boards were established and made responsible for recommending applicants for parish school licenses to the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Government approved or denied applicants salaries based on a petition provided by local officials.

Teachers' petitions from Irish immigrants requesting a license or payment for teaching services contain biographical information including names, country of birth, education, teaching experience, church affiliation, samples of handwriting and certificates from local school trustees or clergymen verifying the character and abilities of the petitioner.

The records gathered here comprise 509 of these petitions and copies of licenses or certifications from 1816-1858 declaring the petitioner's country of birth to be Ireland. These Irish records represent a small portion of the 6645 teachers' petitions which exist in RS655 Teachers' Petitions and Licences, 1812-1882. Researchers should be aware that documentation on other Irish teachers no doubt exist in RS655 but only those records which state that the individual originated from Ireland are included here.

Cheekungtung Collection

The Cheekungtung (also known as Chinese Freemasons) of Victoria, British Columbia was founded in 1876. The Cheekungtung functioned as an unofficial organization to maintain order in the Chinese communities and assist members in need. The Dart Coon Club is loosely affiliated with the Chinese Freemasons society. The Dart Coon Club of Vancouver, British Columbia was established in 1918, with the intention to protect local property from followers of Dr. Sun Yat-Sen who attempted to utilize the resources of the Hongmen Cheekungtung to support his new government. Today, the Chinese Freemasons of Vancouver use the Dart Coon Club to own and administer two buildings in Vancouver's Chinatown on Pender Street.

The collection consists of records that reflect the functions of the Chinese Freemasons of Canada, especially in Victoria and Vancouver, their activities supporting the Chinese communities in Canada; the lives and concerns of their members in British Columbia; and their ties with China, spanning approximately from 1876 to 1956. The textual records in the collection primarily consist of old style Chinese games, manuscript and printed Chinese medical texts, correspondence, donation books, publications, solicitations of donations for members in need, receipts, and election ballots of the Dart Coon Club. Languages of the material are approximately 90% Chinese and 10% English.

These records provide a glimpse into the workings of a Chinese-Canadian organization over an extended period of time. In addition, items such as the Chinese herbal medicine texts and Chinese games retain significant cultural value to Chinese-Canadians.

Cheekungtung Collection

Le Cheekungtung (ou les francs-maçons chinois) de Victoria, en Colombie-Britannique, fut fondé en 1876. Le Cheekungtung était un organisme non officiel ayant pour objet de faire observer l'ordre dans les communautés chinoises et d'aider les membres dans le besoin. Le Dart Coon Club, un club de Vancouver établi en 1918, avait des liens lâches avec la société des francs-maçons chinois. Il avait pour objet de protéger les biens locaux des disciples du Dr. Sun Yat-Sen, qui tentaient d'utiliser les ressources de Hongmen Cheekungtung pour appuyer son nouveau gouvernement. Aujourd'hui, les francs-maçons chinois de Vancouver utilisent le Dart Coon Club pour gérer deux édifices dans le quartier chinois de Vancouver, sur la rue Pender.

La collection contient des registres qui révèlent notamment les rôles des francs-maçons canadiens, particulièrement à Victoria et à Vancouver, leurs activités supportant les communautés chinoises au Canada, la vie et les inquiétudes de leurs membres en Colombie-Britannique, ainsi que leurs liens avec la Chine. Ces registres couvrent la période entre 1876 et 1956, environ. Les documents textuels de la collection sont essentiellement des jeux chinois de style ancien, des documents médicaux chinois manuscrits et imprimés, de la correspondance, des registres de dons reçus, des publications, des requêtes de dons pour les membres dans le besoin, des reçus, et des bulletins de vote du Dart Coon Club. Environ 90% des documents sont en chinois, et 10% sont en anglais.

Ces registres présentent un aperçu du fonctionnement d'un organisme chinois au Canada pendant une période prolongée. De plus, certains documents comme les textes sur la phytothérapie chinoise et les jeux chinois revêtent une importante valeur culturelle pour les Canadiens d'origine chinoise.

La collection est une contribution de Livres rares et collections spéciales, Université de la Colombie Britannique
